

Sales Compensation Strategies

Overcoming Challenges and Implementing Best Practices

Sales compensation is a fundamental aspect of salesforce effectiveness, intricately linked to various strategic components such as plan design, pay mix, target setting, and alignment with broader product and market strategies. Understanding and addressing the technical and logical nuances of these elements is critical for crafting effective sales compensation plans that drive desired behaviors and achieve business objectives. This blog provides insights into the key challenges in sales compensation and discuss best practices to address these challenges effectively.

Components of Salesforce Effectiveness

Sales Strategy

Effective market and customer segmentation identifies attractive markets and customers. A well-designed compensation plan incentivizes sales teams to focus on high-potential segments.

Value Proposition

Understanding customer needs and how the company's products meet those needs is essential. Compensation plans should reward sales behaviors that enhance the value proposition.

Digital Channel Strategy

With the increasing importance of digital channels, optimizing these channels is essential. Sales compensation should encourage the effective use of digital tools and platforms to reach and engage customers.

Corporate, Marketing, and Brand Strategy

Creating demand through strategic offerings and communication to the target market is crucial. Aligning the compensation plan with these strategies ensures that sales efforts support broader corporate goals.

Business Planning

Building a challenging yet realistic plan that aligns with corporate strategy ensures that sales targets are achievable and support long-term business objectives. Compensation plans should motivate sales teams to meet these targets.

The challenge: Key Sales Plan Design Issues

Sales compensation plans involve multiple design parameters, including pay mix, metrics, payout mechanics, timing, cost, and governance. These parameters must be carefully balanced and aligned with the company's market, product, and channel strategy. Key design issues include:

Commission vs. Target-Based Plans

Choosing between commission and target-based plans depends on the business context. Commission plans are effective for driving sales of new products or when entering new markets, as they provide immediate rewards for sales efforts. However, they may not encourage long-term customer relationships. Target-based plans are better suited for mature markets and can be tailored to specific sales targets, promoting sustained customer engagement.

Pay Mix and Upside

Choosing between commission and target-based plans depends on the business context. Commission plans are effective for driving sales of new products or when entering new markets, as they provide immediate rewards for sales efforts. However, they may not encourage long-term customer relationships. Target-based plans are better suited for mature markets and can be tailored to specific sales targets, promoting sustained customer engagement.

Designing Effective Sales Compensation Plans

Effective sales incentive plans are dynamic and must be continuously monitored and adapted to align with a company's evolving strategy. This necessitates a robust reporting and governance framework that ensures these plans remain effective, fair, and strategically aligned. Typically, companies review their compensation plans periodically, involving key stakeholders who ensure that plans are functioning as intended and report on their effectiveness.

Change Management

Implementation strategies include appropriate change management practices, ensuring senior-level buy-in and effective communication throughout the organization.

Timely Communication

Plans are communicated to employees in a timely manner, ideally before or within the first month of the performance period.

Clear Accountability

Defining clear input and decision-making accountabilities helps streamline the design process and ensures all stakeholders are aligned.

Formal Design Calendar

Establishing a formal calendar for the design and review of compensation plans ensures regular updates and keeps the plans relevant.

Cross-Functional Design Process

Leading companies adopt a cross-functional approach to the design of their sales compensation plans, including input from sales, finance, HR, and marketing to ensure a well-rounded perspective.

Comprehensive Documentation

Plan documentation distributed to employees includes program policies, plan documents for specific roles, and individual plan acknowledgment forms. HR maintains a physical or electronic file of these plans.

Design Process and Managing Cost Exposure

The design process for sales compensation plans should involve key stakeholders and be subject to periodic review to ensure alignment with evolving business strategies. Best practices include

Best Practices for Managing Cost Exposure

Performance Scenario Modeling

Regularly model performance scenarios against plan designs before finalization and throughout the year. This proactive approach helps in anticipating potential issues and adjusting plans accordingly.

Compensation Cost Analysis

Analyze Compensation Cost of Sales (CCOS) by representative performance quartiles to ensure cost-effectiveness and alignment with performance.

Dashboards and Metrics:

Utilize pay-and-performance dashboards by sales role, tracking trends in payout levels, achievement rates, CCOS, Variable Cost of Sales (VCOS), turnover, and top account performances.

Upcoming Trends in Reporting and Governance

Centralized Management

There is a trend towards increasingly centralized processes for the design, administration, and reporting of sales compensation plans. Some companies establish centers of excellence to manage these processes effectively.

Clear Operating Models

Best-in-class companies clearly articulate their operating models and RACI (Responsible, Accountable, Consulted, Informed) charts for cross-functional participants. This clarity ensures that everyone understands their roles and responsibilities.

Checks and Balances

Implementing more checks and balances helps ensure strategic alignment and adherence to best practices in plan design.

Increased Pay-at-Risk:

The trend towards higher Target Total Compensation and increased competition has led organizations to put more pay at risk. This approach incentivizes higher performance but also requires sophisticated modeling to manage pay variability and exposure.

Sophisticated Financial Modeling

As the finance function becomes more involved in the design and management of sales compensation programs, companies are becoming more sophisticated in modeling pay variability and performance scenarios.

Comprehensive Approach to Sales Compensation Strategy

A well-structured Sales Compensation Strategy practice must encompass a range of comprehensive services designed to address the diverse and dynamic needs of global sales compensation. This approach ensures that compensation plans are competitive and strategically aligned with the overarching business objectives.

Key capabilities essential for an effective sales compensation strategy include:

Competitive Assessment: Align compensation plans with the business strategy to ensure they support the company's goals and market positioning. This involves analyzing the competitive landscape to understand how peers structure their compensation plans. By doing so, organizations can develop compensation strategies that are attractive to top talent and drive desired sales outcomes.

Benchmarking: Compare the company's compensation plans against industry standards and best practices. This process ensures that the compensation plans are competitive and can attract and retain high-performing sales talent. Benchmarking provides insights into market trends, compensation levels, and incentive structures used by industry leaders.

Motivating Selling Behaviors: Design compensation plans that drive specific selling behaviors aligned with the company's strategic goals. This includes incentivizing behaviors such as targeting high-potential markets, promoting new products, or achieving specific sales targets.

Accurate Plan Information: Ensure that compensation calculations are timely, accurate, and transparent to maintain trust and motivation among the salesforce. This requires robust systems and processes for capturing and processing sales data, calculating payouts, and distributing compensation accurately and on time.

Effective Communication: Clear and consistent communication of the compensation plans is essential for building trust and buy-in among the sales team. Effective communication ensures that salespeople understand how their compensation is calculated, what behaviors and outcomes are rewarded, and how they can maximize their earnings.

Essential: Monitoring and Adapting Sales Compensation Plans

Continuous monitoring and adaptation of sales incentive plans are crucial for maintaining their effectiveness. This involves

Regular Performance Reviews: Analyze performance data against plan designs to identify areas for improvement and ensure that the plans remain aligned with strategic goals.

Centralized Management: Coordinate the design, administration, and reporting processes through a centralized function to streamline operations and improve accountability.

Clear Metrics and Reporting: Implement dashboards and reporting tools that track key metrics, such as payout levels, achievement levels, and compensation costs, to provide transparency and facilitate data-driven decision-making.

Ready to Develop Effective Compensation Strategy

Developing effective sales compensation plans requires a nuanced understanding of the technical and strategic aspects of salesforce management. To ensure the effectiveness of sales incentive plans, companies should benchmark against best-in-class practices and identify areas for improvement. We recommend developing a quarterly scorecard tailored to each company and its specific plans. This scorecard should track plan performance against key metrics, providing actionable insights for continuous improvement. By addressing key design issues, involving stakeholders in the design process, and continuously monitoring and adapting plans, companies can create compensation strategies that drive salesforce effectiveness and support broader business goals. An effective Compensation Strategy practice offers a wealth of experience and resources to help businesses succeed.

Please reach out to Accrete at accrete@acnsol.com / +1 877-849-5838 for any additional information or help that you may need.

USA

7116 252nd Avenue NE
Redmond, WA 98053

Noida

The Iconic Corenthum
1st & 2nd floor, Sector
62, Noida-201301

South Africa

609 Lanseria Corporate
Estate, Falcon Lane,
Lanseria, Gauteng

